Confidently she shuffled along the street in her almost impossibly expensive shoes; indeed she had every reason to be confident, being one of the most highly paid women in the country before even reaching her 40th birthday. Under her arm she carried another financial master-plan, which would undoubtedly save her company thousands of pounds (just like all her previous ideas had done). Today she had decided to wear her favourite two-piece lime suit and a red beaded necklace. Usually she would wear her hair bunched up, but for a change she decided to let her shiny, smooth locks flow down below her shoulders. Trailing behind her she left both her personal assistant and a fragrant scent of perfume. Although her real name was Ms Higgins, most people knew her by her nickname of the Dundee Dragon. Why was she called this? Well, anyone who crossed her path would tell you that while coming across initially as charming, sweet and amiable, in fact she had a far nastier side!
